

The Working Environment

- 1) A person on the autistic spectrum functions quite well in any kind of employment if given the empathy.
- 2) The working environment needs to be adjusted to our needs, that is an atmosphere where we can feel at ease and motivated. Lighting, smells, sounds and room temperatures can determine the moods of a person on the autistic spectrum.
- 3) We learn things differently where our understanding can process in different ways, depending on how well we can orientate ourselves to a task in a particular environment.
- 4) It helps us who are on the autistic spectrum a lot to be organised because we are able to be in full control of what we are doing.
- 5) Sudden unexpected changes can be frustrating and stressful for us because it destroys the therapy of a task where it disorientates the rhythmic flow of the ways of our progress.
